REMARKS.

In selecting teachers for our schools we have taken pains to get those who could give good recommendations in regard to qualifications as teachers; and, as we have to deal almost entirely with strangers, we cannot expect to get teachers that are always desirable as teachers. But, we think the schools have been for the most part a success and the teachers have labored hard for the welfare of their scholars, and the result has been good lessons and generally good order, and improvement in nearly all the studies. We think our citizens are to be congratulated on the large amount of school received for the small amount of money expended.
